Narcissus or Daffodils (call them what you will) are the gayest of spring-flowering bulbs. Indeed, they belong in every garden however small. Plant them in drifts or naturalize them along the edge of woodlands or use them to skirt the shrub borders. The tiny species Narcissus belong in the rock-garden.

Either full sun or partial shade suits them, and they need to be reset only when the bulbs get too thick.

TULIPS

TULIPS are the glamor flowers of spring. Their wide color range and varying heights and their prolonged season of bloom make them indispensable for a successful spring garden.

We offer here a selected list to provide a wide variety of color for your garden from March through May. If we have omitted any of your favorites, please ask for them.

PLEASE NOTE. To help you in working out color schemes and effective combinations of plants, we have indicated by letters the times of blooming in normal seasons. Thus varieties marked with the same letter may generally be expected to bloom at the same time.
